

EX-hospitality student Damien Cousens is one brave man. Sure, during the day he works as a private investigator but that takes nowhere near as much guts as his night job — when he and his fellow staff don collar and cuffs (and not much else save aprons) to serve drinks and nibbles at functions. “We thought it would be mainly hens-nights, 18th birthdays and 21sts but we’ve got a surprise 60th birthday coming up soon and we’ve also been doing a lot of promotional events,” says Cousens who set up the cheeky service three months ago. “I was warned by a lot of female friends that people would try to lift the apron up but we’re normally there at the beginning of the night so we haven’t had many problems.” Cousens’ waiting staff are an interesting bunch including a marine biologist, circus performer and plenty of hard-up students.

www.collarandcuffs.com.au

